Careful financial planning is an important part of the study abroad experience. Be sure to factor the following considerations into your plan:

- Most of the financial aid and USC scholarships that you use to attend USC can be applied toward studying abroad. If you receive private scholarships, you must ask permission from the donor to use those monies for study abroad.
- Working while abroad may be a possibility, depending on the host country and duration of your stay. However, you should have sufficient funds to cover your study abroad experience prior to departure.

Using information from the resource library, program brochures and websites, create a budget for the study abroad program for which you are applying. All information is confidential. Please be as specific as possible.
